

Complaint No. 5 of 2011 (SM) - In the matter of M/s. Associated Broadcasting Company Pvt. Limited, Hyderabad - Telecast of programme titled “Gay Culture Rampant in Hyderabad” on TV9 News Channel on 22.02.2011

Summary of Order dated 21.3.2011

Numerous complaints were received via e-mails by NBSA in relation to a programme titled “Gay Culture Rampant in Hyderabad” that was broadcast by M/s. Associated Broadcasting Company Pvt. Limited on their television news channel “TV9” on 22nd February, 2011 from 15:11 hrs. to 15:17 hrs, which contained a story relating to mushrooming of gay culture in Hyderabad, Andhra Pradesh.

The NBSA took suo motu cognizance of the matter and proceeded as per regulations.

The subject matter of the Programme was the purported mushrooming of “gay culture” in Hyderabad, Andhra Pradesh, particularly enticing of software employees and students into the “gay culture”; Information and material for the Programme was drawn to a large extent from a social networking site for gays, with the URL: www.planetromoeo.com; and it was claimed in the Programme that through the said Website large number of gay men, including many from Hyderabad were interacting, chatting and communicating with one another and were also meeting each other ; In the Programme, the Channel showed visuals of what was claimed to be a three-star club in Secunderabad, where apparently, gay men were meeting to drink, dance and to enjoy the company of each other. What was significant was that the visuals shown were un-morphed of certain persons (purportedly gay); Further, the Programme contained telephonic conversations between the Broadcaster’s reporter and two persons in which conversations, the reporter spoke to them about their sexual preferences and their possible sexual rendezvous. In that broadcast un-morphed picture of another individual was also shown along with the two others;

The defense taken by the Broadcaster was the following:

1. In broadcasting the Programme it had no intention of criticizing the gay culture, but had sought to bring-out through investigative journalism that (innocent) people were being enticed to illegal and unlawful activities ;
2. The Programme was intended to warn the society at large and the concerned families of the murky affairs in the gay culture, since, a large number of youngsters visit such places where even persons with regular sexual orientation were being made to (wrongfully) indulge in gay relationships;
3. It was claimed to be a “genuine story” telecast only once for a duration of 6 minutes and 51 seconds;
4. The story was claimed to be bona fide revealing personal information already in public domain on a website www.planetromoeo.com where people voluntarily had given the information, because of which there was no breach of privacy of any individuals ;
5. Without showing or identifying any doctor it was claimed that medical opinion apprehended the spread of diseases by such illicit physical relationships;
6. The Programme claimed to prevent blackmail of people by such illegal and unlawful elements in the garb of gay culture;

The Broadcaster admitted in their reply that “in retrospect, TV9 believes that while achieving its objective it could have kept the image and the principles of the persons interviewed in a masked manner by not revealing their true identities. TV9 feels it could have exercised better discretion.....”

The conclusions reached by the Authority after hearing the Broadcaster and after viewing the programme were the following:

1.The Broadcaster defense that the Programme was aired to warn the public at large of the “crime” of blackmail being committed by certain persons who were enticing people into the gay community is untenable. It was clear from the visuals considered along with the transcript that there was no significant reference to such ‘criminality’ in the entire programme;

2. The conversation between the Broadcaster’s reporter and the named individuals also did not contain or expose the alleged criminality to subserve public interest;

3. The overall impact of the Programme was only to make a sensationalized depiction of the gay culture alleged to be prevalent in Hyderabad;

4.The contention that the names, pictures, images, phone numbers and other particulars of persons featured in the Programme were in public domain on the website www.planetromoeo.com was factually incorrect, inasmuch as the said website has an open/public section which gives general information about the activities etc. that are conducted on the said website but does not contain particulars and pictures of individuals; and there is a separate members area, access to which is controlled by a membership identity and password to access which one would need to enroll as a member of the said website. While the names, particulars and photographs etc. of individuals may be available in the said members-only section, it could not be said that such names, particulars and photographs were therefore available in the public domain ;

5.In effect what the content of the Programme clearly did was: instead of carrying a “crime story” it merely carried evidently a gratuitous depiction and reportage of homosexuality among men without any underlying serious message for the society; the Programme needlessly violated the right to privacy of individuals with possible alternate sexual orientation, no longer considered taboo or a criminal act; and the Programme misused the special tool of a “sting-operation” available only to subserve the larger public interest.

Accordingly, the Authority held that the Broadcaster had violated Clauses 5 (Sex and Nudity), Clause 6 (Privacy) and Clause 9 (Sting Operations) of the Code of Ethics, which are binding on the Members of NBA.The defense of the Broadcaster and its attempt to justify telecast of the programme in public interest was wholly untenable.
